Iris Ahronowitz MD is currently a third year resident in Dermatology at the University of California San Francisco. Her areas of interest are in general and medical dermatology and infectious diseases. She just completed an elective rotation in medical dermatology at the University of Pennsylvania under the mentorship of Dr. Carrie Kovarik, supported by a grant from the Medical Dermatology Society. Dr. Ahronowitz recently presented a talk on herpes zoster in hospitalized patients at the Medical Dermatology Society annual meeting in Denver, Colorado in March 2014. She earned the Arnold Gurevitch Award for best resident case presentation at the Pacific Dermatological Society Annual meeting in San Francisco 2013. Her publications have been on topics ranging from severe drug-induced dermatoses to pyoderma gangrenosum to Merkel cell carcinoma. Dr. Ahronowitz attended medical school at the University of California San Francisco where she ran a free dermatology clinic for residents of the St. Vincent de Paul Society homeless shelter.
